The Third World War

Social Crisis and Humanity Without Future

ABSTRACT

Before the End, as an accelerating component, the Third World War will emerge. After this war, life on Earth will become even more difficult to endure. However, this war will not be, as one might suppose, the direct cause of the end itself; it will merely hasten it and make it more evident through the even more precipitous decline into which it will plunge present-day humanity. The war will be, in essence, between the West and the East. The real cause is secret, but factors such as hydrocarbons, oil, and money will also play a role. Ultimately, this final war will be just a repetition of the previous ones.

The Inevitable Conflict: Causality and Projected Dynamics of the Final World War

Mankind has engaged in wars with the purpose of seizing another's goods, to impede their progress, or to defend their religious beliefs, among other motives. In all of them, fear is present.They are labelled with different and romantic names, but at its core, it is "Lord Greed" who pulls all the strings. There have been wars that lasted decades or centuries. If we analyze the First and Second World Wars, we understand that they were caused primarily by the greed of their participants. Furthermore, it is not only money, material wealth, and land that are coveted, but also concealed spiritual matters. To start a war, a pretext is always sought or created.

Hitler started the war for spiritual reasons. The Führer did not die as stated by Trevor-Roper, the man in charge of hiding the truth, a member of England's intelligence service. He died at a very old age somewhere on the globe which we will not yet reveal.

The third and final world war will occur because the West, relying on its strength, will seek to seize even more of the wealth of other peoples. It works diligently to impose ideas and values that are very harmful to humanity. The desire to satisfy the greed of the entrenched clans of old and of "secret" religious beliefs will be the cause of this final great war. Greed is associated with ambition, and both, with fear, and vice versa. The countries that call themselves "advanced," led by the United States, possess immense wealth and power; however, as the ego is never satisfied, they desire more and more. This yearning will lead them to appropriate almost all the wealth of the world. The "backward" countries, unconscious, do not realize anything or pretend to be blind and deaf due to fear and cowardice. In turn, the small clans in each country, accustomed to living on their knees before the dominant world system, do the same: they appropriate almost all the money of their population.

The behavior of these ruling clans of the world is unintelligent and parasitic. In their immoderate eagerness to seize the money and wealth of the Earth, as a reward for obedience to another clan that harbors secret intentions, they forgot about balance and, as a consequence, with clouded minds, without realizing it, they commit suicide. Thus, the law of action and reaction is fulfilled once again. They are cutting down the tree on which their house is built. The Third World War will mark the accelerated, irreversible negative tipping point for life on Earth.

The fissures or cracks that have appeared on the seabed—beyond the natural faults produced by tectonic plates—were caused by nuclear atomic tests carried out by countries that call themselves civilized. In doing so, they demonstrate precisely the opposite, and have done so throughout history. What do you call someone who, inside their own home—where their entire family resides—detonates, either unconsciously or premeditatedly, a powerful war grenade?

The opposing powers we speak of will try to snatch away everything accumulated. For this, they prepared, and for this, they continue to prepare year after year. Their weapons, aimed at each other, are perfected with zeal day after day. They watch and spy on each other with the aim of always being one step ahead in an endless race. The Westerners have woven their web around the world. Among them lies the other problem. They divide the pie. There will be disputes if someone is not satisfied with their portion. The world depends on them. Their boss is called the United States (its leaders, its inner circle). Apparently, no one can stand against them, but they are all led by a "small" group that believes itself to be cunning and invisible. The time will come when some disobeyed law is fulfilled; then, their fights will finish them, because they are governed only by laws created to their own measure by themselves.

The central part of the Great War will begin with the confrontation between the East and the West: a tripartite alliance of Muslim countries led by Iran and assisted by Russia, against the known Westerners: the United States and its perennial satellites, especially England and its ram (spearhead, containment point, or perhaps leader?) in the East, Israel (in secret, the leaders of the latter will once again be the cause of the war). Then the others from the Cold War will join, which will include China, which will lead the "yellow" peoples. (China is the yellow horse). Countries possessing vast thermonuclear arsenals, capable of destroying the world several times over, will launch their bombs, mainly thermonuclear ones. From the Middle East, unstoppable and unknown weapons will be fired by air and sea. These will ravage the impacted peoples. They are super-advanced weapons that the United States failed to discover beforehand, although it suspected their existence. In turn, the United States will respond vigorously with its atomic weapons, detonating them in enemy cities. As always, the knowledge for the construction of these weapons has been brought from the parallel universe known as the fifth dimension.

These first confrontations will be short-lived. The involved Western countries, along with Israel and some treacherous Arabs, surprised, will become convinced of the suicide they are embarking upon. By this point, they already know well that there is no possibility for any of them to be the victor. Therefore, they will establish an interregnum. They will give themselves time to reflect on the madness they have entered, believing themselves powerful, invincible, and underestimating the enemies.

The Unavoidable Aftermath: Systemic Collapse and Existential Consequences

The Westerners, blinded by their hard hearts, will enter a journey of no return. They "crossed the Rubicon" a long time ago, managed by the United States, which, in turn, is managed by Israel. The former is the gorilla (bodyguard) of the latter. They will analyze the possibilities of winning the war. They will review everything planned, all the strategies, and will make new ones. They will think of their possessions all over the world. Strengthened by greed, for a moment, they will believe they can defeat the strange and fierce enemy and will attack from new flanks. They have felt the blow of this archenemy. They ascertain that it can make them disappear from the face of the Earth. They are afraid, they begin to tremble, not only because of the possibility of death smiling at them and licking its lips, but because they will no longer see the proceeds of their dark "businesses." They will no longer enjoy their accumulated wealth, obtained at the price of blood, nor their power. The trio of Muslim countries, one of them a descendant of the ancient Persians, which will act in unison with Russia (all these being natural enemies of the United States and England) are the chosen ones to enforce the Law: to pay the accumulated karma. Peoples and evil individuals pay their karma. "The gods place the head of the wicked before the good," affirm the Initiates.

For a time, they will refine their plans. They will even consider talking about peace with the mortal enemy for fear of losing their riches. Each has its known henchmen.

Finally, after renewed military and economic preparations, they will plunge into war, for the desire of the clans in power not to lose their businesses is stronger. Hoping to subdue the enemy, they will face each other again, they will clash with fury. This time they will use everything they have in their secret silos: biological weapons (bacteria, viruses), chemical, environmental, sonic, nuclear, and others. The United States and its European organization, NATO, will try to invade Russia despite knowing the war history of the Russians. Cruise, ballistic, and intercontinental hypersonic missiles loaded with thermonuclear bombs will rain down on Washington, New York, California, and other major cities. Likewise, on Moscow, London, Paris, Tehran, Damascus, Beirut, Beijing, Tel Aviv, Jerusalem, and others.

However, after a short period of fighting, another interregnum will visit them. It will last a similar span, during which they will lavish themselves on further preparations. At the same time, attempts to solve the conflict will be weak, because they will find themselves frightened and very battered. The metallized hearts and wounded pride of the Westerners will not resign themselves to defeat. Then, after a time, the contest will return. It will be the final resumption, and this "power" with feet of clay (the United States, modern Rome, and its friends), the primary infectious moral focus of humanity, will be annihilated: the demiurge will have lowered its finger upon it.

Any civilization, in any system of the cosmos, that forgets God always reaches its destruction. This is a law almost of common sense. In Europe, speaking of God has already become an object of mockery; however, every person is free to believe or not to believe in God. There is also freedom to be well deceived.

There will be places, small corners, where little will be heard of war, where people will live in relative peace despite economic hardships. After a time, the Earth will also not remain still. Goaded by sidereal "nuncavist" forces, it will not remain in the rear. It will only yearn to shake its body.

It is not necessary to indicate the consequences the war will bring after its conclusion. We can imagine it, knowing the contamination that radioactive bombs and other weapons will cause. They will remain floating in the environment, wandering the seas and continents in search of engulfing those they catch, even if they are hidden in underground bunkers. The explosion of a single hydrogen or neutron bomb in Washington would poison everything. One could not breathe or be exposed to the environment, as everything would be impregnated with carcinogenic radiation (tiny bullets, subatomic particles that, upon penetrating the body, ionize the atoms of its molecules—such as carbon, hydrogen, oxygen, or nitrogen—and cause irreversible damage to the organism or death); even if one survived, one would die. Now, imagine the conditions in which the Earth will be left after hundreds, even thousands, of atomic bombs hundreds of times more powerful than Hiroshima's. I leave it to your imagination.

At this moment, we are in the final phase of preparation for that conflagration. The Third World War will happen in a short time, yes or yes.

Some affluent American citizens intuit the adverse events that will befall their country. Therefore, they are seriously thinking of fleeing—some have already done so—to less dangerous regions.

This final war will not be the cause of the "End of Times" as announced. It will mark the conspicuous and definitive beginning of it. Our beautiful planet, in vast regions, will be seen devastated. Also implicated countries, somewhat removed, will keep tiny lodgings to take shelter. How many people will no longer be among the living! The sky covered by radioactive clouds will offer us a gloomy perspective, as if death were announcing itself. The remaining humanity, tremulous and drenched in an icy sweat, expectant, will keep some strand of hope, but the clouds of pollution, invisible, like ionizing and carcinogenic bullets, will wander, extending their nefarious phalanges everywhere. They will not wish to leave for an extended time. All this will be the Great Beginning of the End.

Now then, is it possible to avoid what has been announced? Or will it already be too late? What will happen to surviving humanity? Where will they escape from the terrible contamination? We know well who is the cause of all this destruction: the ego. But would we accuse them for being as they are or as they were? We could not! Because we know well that each one of us is equally greedy, ambitious, petty, selfish, fearful, fornicating. If we were stuffed into their skins, we would have done the same. But we are not. So we only observe how they destroy themselves and how they drag us into their misfortune.

The Earth, badly wounded, will suffer. It will be clothed in sobs and languid gasps. But it will try to give the situation a rapid turn and, leaping over the problems, will set its course forward. However, the Earth itself, which gave us life, will hold tenacious opposition to this purpose. The fiery liquid of its entrails, impelled, will let itself gush forth. Poor Earth! It can no longer shelter us in its lap like a loving mother. Who is to blame for all this? The seas all around, demented, will roar with tsunamis, hurricanes, storms. The beings that live on their bottoms will chew radioactive water. What organisms will result from this? What genetic mutations will this contamination produce in them? And in those who ingest them? Will these new beings be dangerous? All those hardships will befall those who today are seen exalted. Will they perhaps be the new pariahs? And that much-alluded, but little-assimilated, law of action and consequence will be fulfilled.

The Asian bloc will have an almost Pyrrhic victory, but it will win.

If you wish, dear scientists, to investigate the laws of the cosmos, of the atomic world, the vibrations of the ether or the electromagnetic field, or to find the definitive formula that lies within "dark energy" and even beyond, continue inquiring, but with greater acuity, into the ancient cultures. Indeed, they knew everything.
